

Scanning electron microscopy image of asbestos-form chrysotile fibers extracted from an autopsied human lung. The fibers are 5–30 microns long and are coated with an iron-rich material (cauliflower-like coating) thought to be derived from human proteins.